Our Rich Men—Who Are They?

To the Editor of the New York Evening Post, Feb. 23d:

New York, unlike most of her sister cities, has at last got her pity (as does) where to go to see the name and title of every person, corporation and copartnership, resident or non-resident, that was taxed according to the Assessors' books, for personal property, or liable to be taxed with the amount of property on which the tax was levied. There is a fascination about this species of literature, which will secure for the book an abiding place in the library. For, in proportion to the delinquencies which a man manifests to disclose the nature and amount of his own property, is his desire to know the pecuniary standing of his friends and neighbors. He will find in the capacious volume to which we have referred, however, but a very imperfect gratification of his curiosity. The real property assessed, is, of course, confined to the city and county of New York, and not the slightest intimation is afforded of the amount outside of those limits, which each citizen or corporation may possess. As to the personal property, its very uncertain nature, the indelible value attached to it, and with which its existence can be counted, render any official valuation of it a very difficult matter.

It must also be remembered by the unsophisticated reader that the valuation of the assessor by no means represents the actual value of the property on which taxes are paid; so that it will be necessary to multiply the sums recorded in this book by two or three, in order to arrive at an idea of the just value of the property taxed.

Bearing these facts in mind, it will be of interest to select a few examples of wealthy men from the number whose names they compose the previous notions of their pecuniary responsibility. The owner of Astor first suggests itself as, for many years, connected with the real estate of the corporation, and the name is to be found that Mr. William B. Astor is taxed on $3,250,000 real estate, and $155,000 personal estate. We have no means of ascertaining the amount of Mr. Astor's personal property, as it is the business of any one but himself to know, but there are many in the city, we fancy, who would be glad to take his property off his hands at the assessment price multiplied by ten.

The next book contains but four other names of persons who are taxed on amounts exceeding a million of dollars, viz.: James Lenox, $1,000,000; Moses Taylor, $1,000,000; Peter Lorillard, $1,250,000, and Alexander E. Stewart, $1,088,900. This will probably be a matter of surprise to our readers, and never before has the wealth of these men been the subject of the wealth of our citizens. Instead of only five persons worth a million and over, it is safe to say that there are in the city fifty at least who are as rich. In the same way, quite well-known citizens as Peter Cooper, Cornelius Vanderbilt, George Law, the Grinnells, A. T. Townsend and Anthony Barclay, whose wealth is known and talked of everywhere from the Hub, South or North, do not appear.

A pleasant odor to the application is given and that too in two minutes, in any color desired, that the only natural hair imparted to the hair-dresser, by which it has acquired a world-wide celebrity, and is now in every fashionable establishment in every city, town and village.
